South Seattle Community College Arboretum Featured in Book

The South Seattle Community College (SSCC) Arboretum was recently listed in a who's who of garden destinations of the Pacific Northwest.

The SSCC Arboretum was mentioned in the recently released book "Gardening in the Northwest." The book is part of a series of garden books published by Sunset Magazine, a publication focusing on the Western United States.

The book describes the SSCC Arboretum's "fabulous dwarf conifer display that demonstrates more than 100 cultivars suitable for smaller landscapes." It goes on to say: "The collection has been established with the help of conifer experts Robert and Dianne Fincham, owners of Coenosium Gardens, a mail-order nursery in Eatonville, WA. Take note of the wide variety of conifer colors, forms and textures in this unusual collection."

"We are developing one of the premier dwarf conifer collections at South Seattle Community College, thanks to the Finchams' generous donations of plants, time and expertise," said Van Bobbitt, arboretum coordinator. "It's a great resource for our students and the gardening public."
