High School Students Place First at Roadster Show

Area high school students training at South Seattle Community College's automotive collision repair facilities placed first in the High School Challenge Division at the Seattle Roadster Show.

The students, who are enrolled in the Seattle Public Schools' City Campus Autobody Collision Technology program, won for their work on a 1974 Volkswagen Karmen Ghia. More than 35,000 people attended the weekend show that featured hundreds of cars from across the Northwest and Canada. With the help of their instructors at South Seattle Community College, the Seattle students stripped the vintage car to bare metal, constructed and welded the bodywork and primed and painted the car.

The students represent high schools from across Seattle, including West Seattle, Sealth Ballard, Cleveland, Franklin, Ingraham, Nova, and Roosevelt.
