College Builds Relationship with Sister College

South Seattle Community College continues to strengthen relations with its sister college in Japan – Ube Frontier College and University.

Located in the southern part of Honshu, the largest of Japan's four main islands, Ube Frontier College and University offers curriculum in business, welfare, social work, and psychology.

The school's chairman, Tetsuie Sueyama, and president, Hiroshi Takeshita, will be visiting Seattle for the first time after the success of their students' three-week program at South last August. They will be touring the college on October 6.

The Ube Frontier College and University students took part in South's "Summer Institute: Seattle 101." The students were especially interested in all things about Seattle and did a special presentation on the "10 Reasons to Love South Seattle" as a special feature of their studies here.

The relationship is a benefit to local students as well – offering them the chance to expand their world view and become global citizens. South has several students that have shown an interest in studying at Ube Frontier College and University during the 2005 spring quarter.
