DUWAMISH APPRENTICESHIP & EDUCATION CENTER CHANGES

New name: Georgetown Campus of South Seattle Community College
New address/entrance: 6737 Corson Avenue South
Seattle, WA 98108
(206) 764-5350

South Seattle Community College's Duwamish Apprenticeship & Education Center has been renamed the "Georgetown Campus of South Seattle Community College." The move, which was approved by the Seattle Community Colleges District Board of Trustees, not only reflects the continuing evolution of the instructional facility, but highlights its position as an integral part of the Georgetown community.

The Georgetown Campus is the site of the college's 22 apprenticeship programs, where one-third of Washington state's apprentices receive their training. It also houses the Puget Sound Industrial Excellence Center (PSIEC), a diverse coalition of organizations dedicated to creating and maintaining family-wage jobs, with a special focus on the construction, transportation, and manufacturing sectors.

South Seattle Community College is a pioneer in developing effective workforce training and is a model for public/private partnerships. Innovative new technical skills training programs and services under development include "green collar" job training and clean technology programs. These and other programs of the future will reside under the Georgetown Campus "umbrella" as the college continues its leadership in providing pathways to careers; serving business workforce needs; offering business and government services; delivering programs in transportation, logistics and construction; and promoting environmentally sustainable practices.

In addition to a name change, the Georgetown Campus has a new address as well. As part of the campus construction underway, a new main entrance was created at 6737 Corson Avenue South, around the corner from the former main entrance at 6770 East Marginal Way south.
